Proverbs 22:6

Helpful Hints For Dads

Love Your Wife

Children derive security and stability from knowing that their parents are unified and love one another. This is a good example for them on how they should treat their future spouse. With TV, music and movies today your children are being taught that there are many horrible relationships in the world. Your family does not need to be one of those.

Be A Role Model

Realize that you are a role model. Your children will copy what they see you doing. Smile. Use good manners. Show respect to others—at all times. Your children see you when you mess up. Admit your mistakes and use them as a teaching opportunity.

Respect Your Children

Ephesians 6:1 is a favorite verse of parents. It says that children should obey their parents. As fathers we like that. The next verse says that they should honor and respect their parents. This chapter is getting better and better by the verse. Verse 4 then talks to fathers. It says to not provoke them to wrath. This means that you should not badger them. In other words, you should respect your children the same way they are supposed to respect you.

Give Them Rules To Obey And Expect Them To Comply

Then your kids know their limits and can live within the confines of those rules. You may be thinking that children hate rules and won't obey. Turn that around and think how frustrated you are when you are not sure what is expected of you at work. Each day the boss changes his rules or expectations. It becomes a mine field just to step in the office. Wouldn't it be much better to have written policies that everyone knew and that were enforced? Think how much less frustration there would be for you and your children if they knew what was expected of them. This puts a structure in place so that you can respect one another. Be consistent with the rules you have agreed upon.

Let Your Children Be Children

Be patient with your children. Allow them to be kids and make mistakes. That does not mean that you should never push them to do their best, but also realize their best may be far less than what your best can be. Don't set unrealistic expectations for them.

Talk With Your Children

At certain ages they want to share everything with you. During those times you need to be a good listener. When the time comes that they are less likely to share with you, they will remember that you took the time to listen when their conversations were petty or immature.

Realize Each Child Is Different

You cannot expect the teaching you give one child to work for all of your children. Help each of one to stand strong for the right things and be more gracious toward others who don't see the world the same as they do. You will raise godly children who honor the Lord.

Take Your Children To Church

Share your faith with your children. They should grow up knowing that you love the Lord. Going to church together is a great step in building a lasting love for God.

Have A Blessed And Happy Father's Day!
